There were no public libraries, no colleges worthy of the name; there was no art, no science,--still worse, no literature but Simms's: And," I went on, with some warmth, "it was large enough just before you came in, and pleasant enough. The instrument is there, but it is 'stopped down.'" That all sorts of things may exist in a very small compass no doubt is true. But I am drifting. I see in some of the modern novels we have been talking of the same unscrupulous daring, a blindness to moral distinctions, a constant exaltation of a passion into a virtue, an entire disregard of the immutable laws on which the family and society rest. I cannot undertake to quote from Humphreys's poems. The little old man, who was not unlike a petrified Frenchman of the last century, had risen before daylight, roused up his daughters, and had them down on the sidewalk by four o'clock, waiting for hack, or horse-car, or something to take them to the station. The help of the engraver had early been called in; and tens of thousands of children looked with terror and delight on execrable copper plates, which represented Christian natural disasters in 2011 essay thrusting his sword into Apollyon, or writhing in the grasp of Giant Despair. But as we grow older and find more ease of expression, especially if it be in a way by which we can reach the general ear and heart, these private utterances become less and less needful to us."
